Okay, I have to revise what I just said. Trip McConkey says that Natasha Sesko's guardian (a law firm in Tacoma), asked Trip if they could remove the tanks from McConkey's property. Trip said yes, of course, but he said that was a month or so ago and they are obviously still there. The guardian told Trip that DNR is levying daily fines. I have the guardian's email address; I will inquire.

DNR? Good to know. Do you have a contact person / project officer?

Those are the Sesko submarine-stuck-on-the-bottom-lifters. I'm sure that's not what they're called, but Bill was trying to invent something to raise sunken subs. DNR is supposed to remove them soon. They have nothing in them except for air.

Janet, this topic came up at Greg's neighborhood meeting with the College. Do we know who owns these tanks? Does the City have any jurisdiction regarding code compliance? Folks were wondering what possible hook we might have to get these tanks out of there. Thanks chal
